Is there a remedy for the PCR disease? (Part 1)

(Legal remedies for fraud and crimes against humanity)

by T.P. Wilkinson / February 20th, 2021

Bremen is a small city-state in the Federal Republic of Germany. It is one of two cities from the medieval Hanseatic League that have retained their political identity and autonomy over several centuries. The other is Hamburg. Such historical autonomy has also produced idiosyncratic personalities and unconventional or non-conformist policies.

For instance, Bremen's constitution was strongly influenced by merchant Calvinism. So the city is noted for its lack of ostentation. The head of the church in Bremen is the mayor in his capacity as senator for religious affairs. To distinguish themselves from the surrounding aristocratic principalities and the kingdom of Prussia in the German Empire, Bremen citizens traditionally do not accept or display honors and medals. It is a city that prides itself on civility and citizen government, even if at the hand of patricians.

Hence it is no surprise that the most concentrated civil and legal defense against the German federal government's constructive pandemic measures have been undertaken by a law firm led by Rainer Fuellmich from Bremen.

As Dr Fuellmich describes in detail in the video linked below, he and colleagues worldwide have filed a class action suit against the "propagator" of the notorious PCR test, Christian Drosten at the Berlin Charité university hospital. Christian Drosten has been the principal marketer of the test originally developed by Dr K Mullis (+2018) as the "gold standard" for identifying the Sars-Cov2 virus in humans. This use of the so-called PCR test, already denounced by Mullis in 2012, has been, and continues to be, the weapon of mass infection upon which the destruction of the SME sector and civil rights are predicated.

Dr Füllmich explains why the evidence to date warrants not only charges of fraud (not negligence) and crimes against humanity.

Even if Covid-19 has become an article of contemporary religious dogma, immune to rational debate, the time for a Reformation is never too late.
